

Poems for Jacob and Josie

Whodunnit

Jacob was a curious child, always shy, never wild.
He sprinted back into view,
bearing his terrible news.
Someone had stolen his precious pet.
One of the many I'd never met.
A fat green worm with blackened dots,
Jake advised through thickening snot.
He had a chrysalis in a tub,
minus his beloved grub.
Look! He's been taken... But why?
Don't worry son, he learned to fly.

Josie

We visited the local park,
where Josie was dressed as a shark.
School had taught her about the sea,
now that's where she wanted to be.
Jacob pretended to be a fish,
to help Josie fulfil her wish.

Playtime

Jacob was an adventurous boy,
the world was one enormous toy.
He really loved to be outside where the green space was open and wide.
He came home caked in sticky mud,
having landed face first with a thud.
On his front he'd skidded down the slide,
and thereby learned a lesson in life.

Friends

Josie is Jacob's new best friend.
Every spare minute together they spend climbing trees, finding frogs, stroking cats or walking dogs.
Today they built a secret den,
to hide from the monstrous Kraken.
When the rain began to fall inside,
they ran away, to escape the tide.
