

AI will become a part of humanities. I know this, and I dislike this. It actually annoys me that this prompt is AI generated. However, much like how my distaste for AI is not particularly unique, the continuation of human performances of music - and the journalism that comes with it - is luckily not unique either. The girl, playing the violin, is one of thousands. Millions. Humans have always been creators, and I don't think that we're going to be drowned out by AI any time soon.

My father claims that Springsteen once said, "You can't write music from the back of a limousine."

I say that you can't play and write and report on music if you aren't in possession of a human soul.
